

Selenium Chelate or Selenium-200

Just 200 mcg. of selenium a day may reduce your chance of getting cancer by 50%

In an article taken from Julian Whitaker's Health & Healing®, Vol. 7, No. 2, 1997, Dr. Whitaker explains that selenium appears to have several anti-cancer activities:

- Selenium is a wonderful antioxidant, protecting cells from free radical damage.
- But it also helps cellular DNA repair which may help prevent carcinogenesis.
- Most importantly, selenium initiates apoptosis, which means that cancer cells may die before they have a chance to reproduce.

“Since 1969, it has been known that the blood levels of cancer patients are low in selenium. In general, cancer patients with lower-than-average selenium levels have a greater number of primary tumors, more recurrences, more distant metastases (tumors that have spread to distant parts of the body), and a shortened survival time. In a study of 12,000 people conducted in Finland, the risk of fatal cancer in people with the lowest levels of serum selenium was nearly six times higher than that in people with the highest selenium concentrations.”

Over 1300 patients with a history of basal cell or squamous cell carcinoma were studied for 8 years while some were given 200 mcg. of selenium per day. Although there was no significant effect on the incidence of basal cell or squamous cell carcinoma, there was a significant reduction in cancer mortality, including:

LUNG- 45%,

COLO-RECTAL-58%

PROSTATE-63%.
